What are home health services and who is eligible?

Home health services refer to health care services provided in-home to help with recovery from illness or injury. Examples of home health services include intermittent skilled nursing care (e.g. wound care and IV therapy), physical therapy, occupational therapy, and speech-language pathology services. Services may be covered by Medicare Part A and/or Medicare Part B if all of the following conditions are met:

- You are under a doctor's care and the services received are part of a plan of care established and regularly reviewed by a doctor;
- There is a need, and a doctor certifies a need, for intermittent skilled nursing care or physical therapy, occupational therapy or speech-language pathology services;
- The home health agency providing services is Medicare-certified;
- You are homebound, which means leaving your home without help is difficult or is not recommended due to illness or injury, and a doctor certifies you are homebound.

Your plan of care may also include intermittent home health aide services such as help with daily living activities like bathing, transferring or making a meal, although these services are limited in frequency and duration. Medicare does not pay for ongoing assistance with daily living activities.

You can also explore coverage for home health care services through other insurance you may have, such as Medicaid or private insurance. (Obtained from www.medicare.gov.)

What are home care services?

Home care services are typically nonmedical services that include assistance with activities of daily living like bathing, dressing, eating, mobility, toileting, and transferring or instrumental activities of daily living such as meal preparation, medication administration or management, grocery shopping, laundry, and cleaning. Assistance with activities of daily living may also be referred to as personal care, i.e. hands-on care administered to an individual's body. Help with instrumental activities of daily living may be called supportive home care or homemaker services, i.e. services provided around a person's environment. Personal care services are paid for privately or by Medicaid. Medicare does not pay for personal care services.

What is companion care?

Companion care encompasses a variety of services, including but not limited to help with shopping and errands, adult and senior transportation to and from doctor appointments and social events, and travel companionship. Companion care can also include supportive home care tasks.
